Shocking document: How the US planned the war and energy crisis in Europe

INTERNATIONAL >

In what appears to be an exceptional internal leak from the think tank RAND Corporation, known among other things to have been behind the American strategy for foreign and defence policies during the Cold War, a detailed account is given of how the energy crisis in Europe has been planned by the United States. The document, which dates from January, acknowledges that the aggressive foreign policy that was being pursued by Ukraine before the conflict would push Russia into having to take military action against the country. Its actual purpose, it contends, was to pressure

- Europe into adopting a wide range of sanctions against Russia, sanctions which had already been prepared. ■ The European Union's economy, it states, "will inevitably collapse" as a result of this, and its authors rejoice in the fact that, among other things, resources of up to $9 billion will flow back to the United States, and well-educated young people in Europe will be - forced to emigrate. The key objective described in the document is to divide Europe especially Germany and Russia - and destroy the European
- economy by placing useful idiots in political positions in order to stop Russian energy supplies from reaching the continent. PUBLICERAD 15 SEPTEMBER 2022 - AV MARKUS ANDERSSON and an induced energy crisis.

RAND Corporation's think tank, which has a huge work force of 1,850 employees and a budget of $350 million, has the official aim of "improving policies and decision-making through research and analysis". It is primarily connected to the United States Department of Defence and is infamous for having been influential in the development of military and other strategies during the Cold War. A document signed RAND, under the opening heading of "Weakening Germany, strengthening the U.S.", suggests that there is an "urgent need" for an influx of resources from outside to maintain the overall American economy, but "especially the banking system".

independence of Germany. Among other things, it points out that Brexit has given Germany greater independence and made it more difficult for the United States to influence the decisions of European governments.

According to RAND, the main obstacle to this ambition is the growing

A key objective that permeates this cynical strategy is, in particular, to destroy the cooperation between Germany and Russia, as well as France, which is seen as the greatest economic and political threat to the United States.

The only way: "Draw both sides into war with Ukraine" In order to crush this political threat, a strategic plan, primarily focused on into war. "The only possible way to ensure that Germany rejects Russian energy supplies is to draw both sides into the military conflict in Ukraine. Our continued actions in this country will inevitably lead to a military response from Russia. Russia is clearly not going to leave to the massive Ukrainian army's pressure on the Donetsk People's Republic without a military response. This would make it possible to portray Russia as the aggressive party and then implement the entire package of sanctions, which has already been drawn up". Green parties will force Germany to "fall into the trap" The green parties in Europe are described as being particularly easy to manipulate into running the errands of American imperialism.

"The prerequisite for Germany to fall into this trap is the dominant role of green parties and European ideologies. The German environmental movement is a highly dogmatic, if not fanatical, movement, which makes it quite easy to get "Personal characteristics and lack of professionalism make it possible to assume that it is impossible for them to recognise their own mistakes in time. I will therefore be sufficient to rapidly form a media image of Putin's aggressive war and make the Greens into ardent and tough supporters of sanctions – a 'war party'. This will make it possible to impose the sanctions without any obstacles".
